Fun Day entertains campus and community

By Sara Sutton
Staff Writer

Lions and tigers and bears, oh my! Face-painted ones, that is, as hundreds of faculty, staff and local community members came out this past Saturday to spend the afternoon on SU's campus for a day full of fun.

Fun Day is an annual event, free of charge, hosted by Salisbury University and geared toward family and educational fun. The theme this year was "Explore SU" and with over 100 events expanding across the whole campus there was literally something for everyone. Arts and crafts, sporting events, theater, music, inflatables and palm readings were some of the many activities in which participants could partake.

"We take the kids every year, they love it. The problem is there is too much to do!" joked local resident Mary Williams.

One highlight from this year's event was a special Renaissance focus on Holloway Hall lawn as the children cheered on their favorite knight in a live jousting competition. Wood chips flew as the knights fought a hard battle that lead to an epic sword fight. The winner was Dame Fiona of Orkney, played by Becca Cooper, who overcame two sword blows to finally knock down her opponent.

But if the 21st century is more your style, then the mountain bike stunt show by five-time national champion biker Mike Steidley was an excellent choice. He demonstrated the "ups and downs" of stunt cycling during two sessions on the Fun Day Green.

Other activities of the day ranged from live music by some of Salisbury's own staff with bands like Laurence Becker, Elvis Who?, and Pugsly, to the famous "Fire and Ice" demonstration by the SU Chemistry department. With a mixture of explosions and ice cream, what could be more fun?

"We want Fun Day to appeal to a wide variety of interests," said Betsy Rodier, Fun Day coordinator. "Families never know what they'll find moving from building to building and classroom to classroom. Devon Farrel of York, played by Scott Rodin, and Dame Fiona of Orkney, played by Becca Cooper, would be competing for the honor of the best knight.

To start off, the two opponents rode their horses around the jousting area and waved their flags so that the audience could get involved by cheering them on.

During the presentation, both Sir Devon Farrel and Dame Fiona kept riding the horses while taking part in the different jousting events, which included using lances to poke a wooden obstacle and then using the lances to pick up rings that squires held in the air.

After putting on armor helmets and fighting with wooden swords, the pair then battled with lances and metal swords.

The battle continued even after Dame Fiona fell off her horse, and after a little while of fighting on foot, Sir Devon Farrel went down and Dame Fiona was declared the champion by William Sidney.

When the show ended, children gathered around the three horses, where they had the chance to pet them.

The presentation was put on by Paragon Jousting, a traveling group from New York. Recently, the

SUCIE introduces Friends of International students

By Stacie Manger
Staff Writer

The SU Center for International Education is sponsoring "Friends of International Students," an organization designed to connect faculty and staff with students from other countries in order to share American culture and traditions.

"The main purpose of this is for faculty and staff to give these students a home," said Dayna Jost, graduate assistant of the SUCIE. "Someone who is older and has a family can offer a different perspective on life and this program gives them a chance to get involved."

The members involved are asked to share a birthday, holiday party or any other kind of family gathering with their student. The SUCIE will host an upcoming reception for the faculty and students to meet.

Salisbury University has over 60 international students, a fact that surprises many people. Jost said that when she says the number, people look rather shocked because no one really notices how many international students attend the University.

Jost explains that when students from other countries come here they are trying to adjust on many levels. They are worried about school, making friends, fitting in and the language barrier, if they have one, she said.

The international students get to create friendships with the faculty and their families. The main benefit of the program is cross-cultural understanding.

"On the news and in classes we talk about American Foreign Policy and the upcoming elections," Jost said. "This program gives the students a chance to learn what that is about. We get to break down barriers and misperceptions of Americans and people from other countries."

People tend to have very strong views about people from other cultures and this organization is a way to

Davis, Harris, Kratovil to debate in Holloway

By Matthew J. Harhai
Staff Writer

Next Tuesday, September 30, Maryland congressional candidates of the first district, Frank Kratovil, Andy Harris and Dr. Richard James Davis, will debate in Holloway Hall.

The three are jockeying for a spot in the House of Representatives. The debate is free and open to both students and the public.

The forum will start at 7 p.m. and will be moderated by Don Rush, Public Radio Delmarva's news manager.

The first congressional district of Maryland covers the entire Eastern Shore of Maryland and parts of Anne Arundel, Hereford and Baltimore Counties, a total of 12 out of the 23 counties in Maryland.

Frank Kratovil is a Democrat from Stevensville. He was elected state's attorney for Queen Anne's County in 2003. In 1997 Kratovil was elected to the position of Assistant State's Attorney in Queen Anne's. In 1994 he became a judicial law clerk for the Circuit Court in Prince George's County. He then took a position as Assistant State's Attorney in Prince George's County, serving there until 1997.

Kratovil was elected President of the Maryland State's Attorney's Association in 2005. In 2006, Maryland's Court of Appeals elect-

'Financial Meltdown' Lecture
The Bellavance Honors Program's Mind Shapnel 'n' Cookies series presents "Black Monday—Exploring the Current Financial Meltdown" with Dr. Arvi Arunachalam, Economics and Finance Department, 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, September 23, in the Honors House classroom. After the losses, bailouts and maneuvers of various companies and governments, explore the markets and attempts to control the damage. The discussion will try to make sense of the current market meltdowns. Arunachalam has studied international markets and crises. Cookies and open discussion follow the presentation. The event is free and all members of the University and community are invited.

Gallant knights and noblemen alike were adept at swordplay during the Renaissance. SU brings the art of swordsmanship to the Holloway Hall Lawn with a four-day fencing demonstration series as part of its Renaissance fall cultural events series. Rain location is Caruthers Hall Auditorium. Demonstrations are 5-6 p.m. Mondays, September 22-October 13. Champion fencing expert Angela Herben-Hodges instructs on beginning forms, blade movement, targeting, showing of weapons and how to bout. Limited equipment is available for audience participation. Sponsored by the Office of Cultural Affairs, admission is free and the public is invited. For information call 410-219-2872.

Bernstein Award Competition Information
Meeting SU students have a chance to win $5,000 to fund a new dance studio, biotech engineering firm, restaurant, preschool, or whatever business venture they dream of launching. The 2008-2009 Bernstein Award Competition will award $5,000 to the best plan for a new business. The Bernstein Competition provides an opportunity for every Salisbury University student—regardless of major to develop a plan for the business of his or her dreams. Both individuals and groups are encouraged to enter. Students who would like to learn more about the competition and the campus resources available to help them create their plans are invited to an information meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 30th at 3:30 in Caruthers Hall 118.

move past those perceptions and grow in knowledge. Children of the faculty and staff involved in the program also benefit from "Friends of International Students." They have the chance to meet someone from an entirely different culture at a young age, something that not everyone gets a chance to do as a child. The adults involved get the satisfaction and reward of being able to share their family life and traditions with the international students, just said. The organization also allows the staff and faculty to get to know each other more.

The Friends of International Students is only for faculty and staff and their families. However, if students want to get involved, there is an organization called "Conversation Partners." With this organization, the international and American students meet once a week for an hour to talk. "They can meet at Cool Beans or go for a walk somewhere just to talk to one another," Just said. "The student from another country gets to practice his or her English while the American gets to learn about an entirely different culture. It's rewarding for both sides."

With the endorsement of incumbent first district Congressman Wayne Gilchrest, a Republican, Kratovil could likely garner many of his opponents' party members.

Kratovil's energy policy states that he is in favor of a gas tax suspension from Memorial Day until Labor Day. He is also in favor of becoming energy independent and exploring domestic oil.

Andy Harris is a Republican from Cockeysville. A member of the Maryland General Assembly, he represents parts of Baltimore and Harford counties in the seventh Legislative District. He is the only physician serving in the state Senate. Harris has served at this post since 1998. He is currently on the Senate Education, Health and Environmental Affairs Committee and the Joint Committee on Health Care Delivery and Financing.

Harris served in the U.S. Naval Reserve Medical Corps from 1988 to the present and actively served during Operation Desert Storm.

Harris is an obstetric anesthesiologist at Johns Hopkins Hospital. He also works as an Associate Professor of Anesthesiology and Critical Care Medicine at Johns Hopkins.

Harris is endorsed by former Maryland Governor Bob Ehrlich, also a Republican.

Harris' energy policy states that he is in favor of a gas tax suspension from Memorial Day until Labor Day. He is also in favor of becoming energy independent and exploring domestic oil.

Dr. Richard Davis, a Libertarian, is a dentist operating a practice in Hurlock. The debate should cover a wide range of the issues that are current in our nation and world today. Issues on the top of that list, most pertinent to the first district and the campaigns of the candidates, include balancing the federal budget, energy and alternative fuels, and the War in Iraq.

According to Politicker.com's Pindell Report, the race for Maryland's First Congressional District is the fifty-second most competitive U.S. House race.

Dr. Brian Polkinghorn receives second Elkins professorship

CADR Center Director Dr. Brian Polkinghorn won the Elkins Professorship for the second time in two years.

By Randon Ryland
Staff Writer

The University System of Maryland has awarded the prestigious Elkins Professorship to Dr. Brian Polkinghorn, director of the Conflict Resolution Center, and the Conflict Analysis and Dispute Resolution

Department, for the second time in two years. The $80,000 grant will be used to return Dr. Arun Gandhi, retired director of the M.K. Gandhi Institute for Nonviolence, global lecturer, and fifth grandson of Mahatma Mohandas Gandhi, to SU, continuing the "Conflict Scholar in Residence" program. The grant will also be used to host "The Gandhi Legacy Tour," a study abroad program stationed throughout India.

"I'm glad we got it," said Polkinghorn. "I was pretty certain, with the momentum we've generated over the years, that it was the Chancellor's office taking notice. To bring notable people to campus, it's not just a one-time effect and it works on momentum or the reputation of the department of the University. The benefits to the students and institution are long lasting."

During the professorship Arun Gandhi co-teaches CADR 409-002 with Dr. Polkinghorn and prepares to speak in SU's "One Person Can Make a Difference" lecture series. Last year, Dr. Gandhi taught and lectured on "Personal Leadership and Nonviolence" and will now present "Gandhi's Global Impact." "It's unfinished business. The 'Global Impact of Gandhi' is a great companion to 'Gandhi on Personal Leadership.' It's the introspective shifting outward to Gandhi's impact not only on other individuals but world leaders - leaders of social movements, nongovernmental organizations, and whole schools of thought that sprung around him," said Polkinghorn. Dr. Gandhi offers the University and community genuine and passionate memories and insights into his grandfather's life and philosophy of nonviolence. He will give his main lecture at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 19, in the Holloway Hall Auditorium.

Dr. Polkinghorn will also use the Elkins Professorship for a study abroad to India led by Dr. Gandhi. The "Gandhi Legacy Tour" will allow students to retrace the footsteps of the Mahatma. The tour encompasses a wide span of India from rural Sangli to New Delhi, stopping at Sabarmati Ashram, Gandhi's headquarters during his most active years of resistance to colonial rule.

"Here you're walking in the footsteps of the Mahatma, with his grandson; you're actually at the places where these things happened. You are an undergraduate, right in the thick of it. It is like a pilgrimage and it's almost like a hajj for some people," Polkinghorn said. "You know, this has a major impact on Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution. It's not just a passing historical moment; it's a major piece of the puzzle." Patrick Robbins, CADR graduate who also studied on the Legacy Tour said, "The Legacy Tour allowed me to take my education beyond the classroom and prepared me to use what I've learned in my life beyond school."

Dr. Polkinghorn has two goals this year: an individual goal for students to meet and learn from Dr. Gandhi, "to really put something into context," he explains, and a goal at the institutional level to continue the momentum for the department, graduate program and Scholars in Residence program which "brings a lot of value to the entire enterprise." The momentum generated by Polkinghorn has gained attention not only from other universities but on an international scale as well. "We're getting e-mails from China, India, Thailand - all around the world from students interested in the Conflict Resolution Masters program, who go to the front page and refer to the Elkins Professorship and Dr. Gandhi," he said.

State-wide hiring freeze puts SU on thin ice

More than thirty University positions left empty

By Jonathan Moynihan
Staff Writer

The failing economy is no longer just a national concern, but a threat to our personal and academic lives. While it has been affecting our lives at work and at home for a long time, few expected to see its arms of devastation reach our humble university. As of last week, it has done so in the form of a state-implemented hiring freeze, disallowing the University to hire any new personnel for faculty or staff positions, leaving SU in quite a bind as it has 21 vacant staff positions and 16 vacant faculty spots.

"The State of Maryland is currently facing substantial revenue deficits, and the Governor's Office is preparing to announce state-wide budget cuts," said SU President Janet Dudley-Eshbach. "This hiring freeze is a temporary measure to avoid lay-offs and to be conservative in our spending."

Eshbach said the Board of Regents and Chancellor Brit Kirwan declared the hiring freeze to be activated immediately across all Maryland institutions as a way to achieve budget reductions and cut back on cost.

"The institution is fiscally healthy. We'll get through this,"

Eshbach said. "The freeze is disruptive, but I'm optimistic." The state's economic situation has caused a cutback in state appropriation, which is one of two major sources of revenue for the University, the other being student tuition.

The freeze puts the University on pause for the time being due to the institution's inability to fill vacant positions and to pursue new avenues of improving the University, which in turn costs more money.

"Right now we can't do anything. We're waiting to hear whether the budget situation worsens. We'll soon get the target budget cut which will tell us how much we have to cut," Eshbach said. However, the University is making efforts to solve the vacancy issues without hiring outside individuals for the time being.

Approximately 12 assistant professor positions are vacant, which could possibly be filled by already employed faculty. In-house staff can apply and possibly receive a pay increase if hired for the additional positions. However, some vacancies can not be as easily filled. SU is looking for a new Director of Admissions and a Dean for the Perdue School of Business, but filling them will have to wait at least until the target budget numbers are given to the institution.

SU currently has 21 vacant staff positions and 16 vacant faculty spots; however, due to a state-wide hiring freeze, these positions might not be filled.

This newly implemented directive has primarily affected the University as a whole, and Eshbach has said that students should not see much of a difference. Although there are exceptions, especially if the budget cut target is more than anticipated.

The state will look to raise in-state tuition across Maryland universities if they are unable to reach their desired goals, leaving students in an even tougher situation than they already are as more and more students fight economic issues outside of their academic lives.

President Eshbach is confident the University will continue smoothly and successfully. "SU is very robust, and we will weather this storm," she said. "This is not a boulder in the road; it's simply a bump."

But Eshbach is prepared to handle the worst if necessary. "The picture doesn't look so draconian, but things could get worse."

SGA holds first fall forum, encourages participation

By Vanessa Junkin
Staff Writer

Another year of listening to students' concerns and strengthening the campus community kicked off with the first SGA Forum, which was held on last Sunday.

SGA President Lili Afkhami explained at the beginning of the forum that these meetings are a place to share information, problems or suggestions relating to SU

"You get to find stuff out first here," she said later during the forum.

Ali Hueber, SGA Executive Vice President, spoke next and said that a representative from each of the campus Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) is required to attend three forums each semester.

Hueber also explained how new clubs can become recognized. The club must have 10 or more people involved, anyone must be able to join and the club cannot recreate an existing club, she said. A representative from the new club must speak about the club at two consecutive forums, and it will then be voted on.

At the Sept. 14 meeting, four RSO hopefuls made their first reading—NAACP, the Exercise Science Club, the Bowling Club and the Medical Careers Society.

Hueber wrote later in an e-mail that "starting a club on campus is really a simple process as long as you know the steps" and also that SGA members would be happy to help potential clubs with becoming recognized.

During the forum, Julia Glanz, SGA Vice President of University Affairs, discussed this year's various homecoming activities that will take place during the week of October 13-18. She said later in a phone interview that SGA will also take part in other upcoming events, like family weekend.

The SGA senators stayed to discuss a few things after the RSO representatives left. One issue was voted on—Pat DiBello was chosen as the SGA Webmaster.

Afkhami stressed during the forum—and after it in a phone interview—how important the senators are to the SGA. In the interview, she discussed how the senators act as liaisons, bringing the students' needs to the executive board's attention.

New SGA members are always welcome, Afkhami said, and interested students should come to the SGA office, located in the Student Activities Office in the GUC. The next forum will be held on Sunday, Oct. 12, at 7 p.m. in Henson Hall 243.

Students who don't want to act as part of the SGA are also invited to attend the forums, mentioned Hueber in an e-mail. "The only way SGA can be really effective is if we know the issues that students are concerned about!"

Career Services launches student-involved blog

By Michelle Hinkle
Staff Writer

Career Services launched another project last week to aid students by adding a blog to the SU Web site. Associate Director of Career Services Charlie Endicott is posting information on the blog and encouraging students to do the same. The blog is divided into ten categories: career planning classes, cover letter information, credential file services, e-recruiting instructions, interviewing skills, job fairs, job search information, mentor network, first destination survey and resume writing. Since the blog project is just beginning, all of the information that has been posted can be seen through the recent post page.

The blog currently consists of information about the approaching job fair, dressing for the job and internship fair, general tips for the event and transforming resumes. Students can add their own subjects at any time by adding a topic of interest to the comment section of the page. Endicott plans to post new articles daily if possible.

The information that has been posted to the site is thorough and detailed enough to benefit students who plan to attend any job fair or interview. Each posted topic within the blog is explained in an easy-to-read list format that provides answers to important questions in a straightforward manner. The section entitled "Transforming a Resume from Ho-Hum to Wow" is divided into thinking about a target audience, making sure you have the right type of resume, including an objective or skills summary, focusing on accomplishments rather than job duties and adding hard data. The entries preceding this one are laid out in the same fashion. This new addition to the Career Services Web site is an asset to students and alumni.

Although an e-mail was sent to the campus community advertising the Career Services blog, the student response has been slow. The four posts have no comments from students asking questions or bringing up topics to discuss in the future. 15 of 20 surveyed students said they thought that adding a blog to the Web site was a good idea. Only five of 20 of the same surveyed students said they thought they would add to the blog themselves. These results come as a surprise since the blog is designed to benefit students and make the experience of finding a job less stressful. All of the students surveyed reported that they had noticed a difference in the amount of effort made by Career Services to reach them. The Career Services department is continuing the effort to lead students to successful futures by planning more workshops and providing more information than ever before.

Power-sharing agreement a new hope for Zimbabwe?

Zimbabwean president Robert Mugabe ceded some of his powers on Monday. His failed policies have run the country into the ground.

By Kelley Matney
Staff Writer

Last Monday, in front of numerous political leaders from across southern Africa, that included presidents, prime ministers and even a king, the Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe signed a power-sharing agreement. This agreement requires him to surrender some of his powers for the first time since Zimbabwe attained independence from Britain and his tyrannical regime began 28 years ago.

The agreement, signed in Harare, Zimbabwe's capital, by Mugabe and opposition leaders, has provided some hope that there will be a turnaround that is desperately needed in this country that has been failing both economically and politically for many years.

Due to Mugabe's ineffective and disastrous policies, such as his land redistribution campaign that confiscated the land of white commercial farmers, causing widespread food shortages, and his urban rationalization program that resulted in the loss and destruction of 700,000 homes and businesses

This agreement came after several stressful months of negotiations led by Thabo Mbeki, President of South Africa. It began after the March election which gave a Parliament majority to the MDC and a presidential win to Tsangirai.

However, Tsangirai pulled out just before the June run-off election, citing government-backed attacks on his followers. Being the only candidate on the ballot, Mugabe won the election that has been criticized worldwide.

"Our hope is for the Zimbabwean people, that they can now move forward, and that the agreement can be implemented in a way that represents the will of the people," said Sean McCormack, spokesperson for the U.S. State Department, in a daily press briefing on Sept. 15.

The agreement was unclear on who will be in charge of certain departments of the cabinet and that is where the talks between the three main leaders have halted. There have been two official negotiations since the agreement was signed and both ended with relatively no progress made.

At his speech after the agreement was signed Mugabe said, "We are committed, I am committed, we will do our best." Yet, that does not seem to be the case.

The problem appears to be that Mugabe and the Zanu-PF party do not want to release control of key powerful ministries like those in charge of defense, finance, home affairs and information.

Mugabe's tone since signing the agreement doesn't help either and has created reservations for some about his sincerity. On a live television broadcast he assured his party that they would remain in the "driver's seat" and "will not tolerate any nonsense from [their] new partners."

It is to remain unclear how far this agreement will rescue the once successful country from near economic ruin, or if this is false hope for a new Zimbabwe.

Off-shore drilling energy bill approved by House despite Republican backlash

By Sarah Duffy
Staff Writer

The House of Representatives passed an energy bill last Tuesday that allows more oil drilling off the U.S. coastline. Republicans disagree with the new bill because of the limitations it places on where drilling can occur.

The Comprehensive American Energy Security and Consumer Protection Act permits drilling only between 50 and 100 miles off the coast. Republicans generally want to allow drilling as close as three miles offshore. States must give permission to allow drilling 50 miles away from the coast, but will receive no benefits.

Offshore drilling is controversial because of the effects it may have on the environment. In 1969, an explosion from an oil rig off the coast of California carried oil to the beaches, causing tar to form on shore. "The explosion killed marine life, including sea lions and over 4000 shore birds," said Dr. Joan Maloof, Professor of Biological Sciences at SU.

"I see offshore drilling as people being stuck in the old paradigm," Maloof said. "It is hard for Americans to accept getting energy from resources other than oil. But instead of drilling, America can create different forms of producing energy."

Maloof worries about the economy of the Eastern Shore if there were to be an oil spill. "Ocean City gets so much money from tourism," Maloof said. "If there is a spill, people would lose their livelihoods."

The Senate must now accept or reject the bill and is expected to debate the energy packet during the next week. It will then be handed to Congress, who meets on Sept. 26. If passed, the U.S. will allow new off-shore drilling for the first time since the ban in 1981.

Americans will be offered incentives for the use of clean energy and green transportation. It additionally calls for repealing tax breaks for oil companies and will then use that money towards energy efficiency programs, clean coal and electric-hybrid vehicles.

Upsetting Republicans even more, the bill states that 15 percent of all of the United States' electricity must be generated by renewable resources. This will go against each state's individual right to choose its energy source.

This November, Maryland residents will end the five-year debate over whether or not slots should be legal in the state.

Slots on the November ballot

By Jeremy Riffe
Global Editor

On Election Day, Marylanders will have the option of voting for or against Question 2, a state constitutional amendment that will permit the legalization of slot machines in the state. The referendum is the culmination of a fight that began five years ago.

In January 2003, the then newly inaugurated Governor Robert Ehrlich started a push for slot machines in Maryland to address the state's growing economic problems. The machines have been banned in the state since 1968. Throughout Ehrlich's administration, proposals permitting slot machines were passed in the Maryland Senate, but failed in the House of Delegates due to intense opposition.

Each slot proposal has had a large share of its hypothetical revenues reserved for state education costs. Despite this, the legalization of slot machines in Maryland has continually faced considerable resistance.

According to Dr. Michael O'Loughlin, chair of Salisbury University's Political Science Department, "Key objections [have] been, in effect, a moral objection and a public order and safety objection. The moral objection is that the state is endorsing yet another kind of gambling. The lottery is one thing. That's gambling, but this is really saying 'Yeah, we're going to make the money off of fools'... The public safety and order matter is people worry that where these places are going to be set up, in a kind of casino atmosphere, may attract unsavory and dodgy kinds of folks, so that public safety and public order are perhaps threatened."

After Ehrlich was defeated for reelection by Martin O'Malley in 2006, slots reemerged as a viable political issue. Over the past year, support for slots gradually grew, although not by enough for the legislature to reach an agreement itself. In November 2007, both houses agreed to allow the people of the state to decide the question of slots in a referendum to take place this November.

Question 2, the name of the referendum on the ballot, asks voters to vote yes or no to whether Maryland should be able "to issue up to five video lottery licenses for the primary purpose of raising revenue for education..." A maximum of 15,000 machines would be authorized in the state and these would be placed in specific locations in Allegany, Anne Arundel, Cecil and Worcester Counties, and also Baltimore City. Not mentioned on the ballot is the division of revenues, which would have 48.5 percent of revenues go to education, 33 to slot machine operators, 9.5 to the horse racing industry with the remainder divided between local governments, administrative costs and business funds.

Commenting on the chances of slot machines returning to Maryland, O'Loughlin said, "I suspect, if I were betting on this, I would bet that it has a much better chance, I'd bet on it winning this time around."

Marriage should be for everyone

By Tara Underwood
Staff Writer

Marriage. It's one of the many things humans have in common. Whether we decide to get married early or later on in life, it completes us. Men and women find each other and this is the "normal" way of life and the way "things are supposed to happen." However, sometimes in today's society, men find men and women find women. They fall in love just as men and women do, live together and are just as happy.

Recently, Star Trek's George Takei married his long-time partner Brad Altman in a Buddhist ceremony held in Los Angeles after 21 years of companionship.

Many citizens claim gay marriage is unethical and unnatural. They believe marriage can only be a union between a man and a woman and that this is the way it has been for centuries and should always be. But, in all fairness, why should love and marriage be reserved for a man and a woman?

People against gay marriage also believe that raising children in same-sex homes is not a safe environment for them. However, gay couples are just as capable of caring for each other. Some have more love and affection than many heterosexual relationships. Raising children in a home, whether it is homosexual or heterosexual, only depends on the love and commitment of the parents, not their gender.

Another problem people have with gay relationships and marriage is that they are uncomfortable with the idea of them being together. They feel obligated to state it and say how unnatural and unethical it is. However, if they aren't intentionally bothering anyone, why should anyone care?

While these are some reasons that people are against gay marriage, there are a lot of people who are for gay marriage and rights. As more people believe in the right of unions between homosexuals, laws are being made in states to allow this union. So far, only a few states in the nation allow same-sex marriages or civil unions.

Who cares if a man loves a man and a woman loves a woman? They are human beings put on this earth to live for a reason. They don't bother or get in the way of people and are just trying to live their lives like ordinary men and women. Nevertheless, the debate about gay marriage continues and is a huge struggle for many Americans. Will we ever come to a consensus and all just let each other live their own lives?

New Facebook stirs confusion

By Morgan Majchrzak
Staff Writer

It's complicated, confusing, and frustrating. Why did Facebook have to change? I had all my applications set up perfectly, all easily accessible. I, and my friends, could view the bumper stickers I had accumulated. Facebook chat worked fine, and my wall was just the way I wanted it. Everything was neat and orderly. Now, my applications are jumbled, my wall is cluttered, bumper stickers cannot easily be viewed, and sometimes the chat feature does not even appear. Why did Facebook have to mess up a good thing?

When I first heard about the format change, I did not understand what they were changing. Things seemed fine, how could it be perfect? As I logged on, hoping it was merely an option to switch, a little pop-up message appeared at the top of my page informing me that the "new" Facebook would be arriving soon and I could switch over now. Switch to the dark side? Never! Unhesitatingly, I clicked the little "no" in the corner and hoped it would never return. I am an "old" Facebook supporter and always will be. Adding to my frustrations, the same option appeared the next time I logged in. That is when I began trying to ignore what I knew deep down was inevitable. Each day I logged on, cringing while hitting "Enter" after typing my password. Is the "old" version going to greet me, or will I be thrown into absolute confusion upon the "new" version's arrival? Day after day, the "old" version greeted me and I began to think that maybe the switch was optional. Unfortunately, my luck ran out and the day arrived. New Facebook appeared, taunting me, and I could do nothing. I spent hours scouring Facebook groups trying to find some way to go back to the older version. There was no going back. My friends and I complain to no avail. New Facebook is here to stay. Now, instead of logging in and seeing every thing the way I liked it, I am flooded with information - pictures, picture comments, status updates, wall comments and event invites, among other things.

The new Facebook changes have many users confused and angry. The social networking site might lose its appeal if users aren't happy.

Why can't we have a choice? For those who like the newer version of Facebook, I am glad you do. I have friends that do not mind the newer version; they find it easier to maneuver, see information and update. However, why can't those of us suffering have a choice between the versions? Is it really too much for Facebook to allow us that option? What harm was there in the older version? Bring back the "old" version before Facebook loses a lot of members since, according to numerous Facebook groups I have visited, that is the inevitable option. They are as serious as Facebook was about switching and Facebook's popularity will drop much faster than it will ever take for me to understand this "new" Facebook.

Scary times for the American economy: Businesses turn to government for help

By Laura Dignan
Staff Writer

The American economy is facing a difficult crisis after the Dow Jones industrial average lost 504.48 points, a drop equivalent to 4.42 percent, last Monday. It was the Dow Jones' worst slump since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. On Sept. 17, 2001, the first day of trading after the attacks, the Dow lost 684.81 points.

"The economy is likely to be in a holding pattern for the next several months," said Dr. Herman Manakyan, Chair of the Economics and Finance Department at Salisbury University, "until confidence returns and housing markets start picking up, which often is one of the major factors to boost the economy."

On Thursday, the Dow Jones dropped again, losing about 450 points. The two days combined saw the Dow Jones lose over 900 points. The steep decline of the Dow was the result of bad news from the business world.

Lehman Brothers, the country's fourth-largest investment bank, filed for bankruptcy last Monday erasing $700 billion in shareholder wealth. Considering assets, this was the largest U.S. bankruptcy considering. On Tuesday, Lehman Brothers sold its North American investment banking and its trading operations to Barclays, Britain's third-largest bank, for $250 million.

"The financial sector has been reeling from the impact of the subprime mortgage crisis for many months, so problems of Lehman, Merrill Lynch or AIG are not truly surprises," Manakyan said. "Of course the surprise is the extent of the problems, and how far-reaching the crisis has been."

Contributing to the economic crisis, Merrill Lynch, unable to survive by itself, was bought out by Bank of America for $50 billion last week, a similar situation to JPMorgan's acquisition of a frail Bear Stearns in May.

Letters to the Editor

In response to "McCain and Palin: A Perfect Match"

"McCain and Palin: A perfect match?" begins with the statement that Senator McCain wants to cut government spending. McCain was a one-time opponent of the Bush tax cut backs in 2000 when he was running against the President; he is now in favor of these tax cuts. It has been proven that the Bush tax cuts do very little for middle class citizens, yet the McCain campaign continually runs out the idea that it is he and not Senator Obama that will lower taxes. This is not true. Obama's tax plan will help the middle class more than McCain's will. If the Bush tax cuts of 2001 are helping the wealthy, and everyone agrees with this statement, how can McCain say with a straight face that his tax plan, which is nearly the same as President Bush's, will help the middle class? It doesn't make any sense.

The second issue I have with this article states that McCain supports the troops. Since 2001, his record of voting to help the troops is appalling. In 2008, a crucial GI Bill reached the floor of the Senate. John McCain, a veteran of the Vietnam War, did not even bother to show up to vote. Yet this article mentions nothing of this.

Third, both McCain and Obama had links to the Red Cross to provide help for victims of both Hurricanes Gustav and Ike. Stopping his campaign because of the hurricane is admirable, but the underlying issue with this is that the Bush Administration totally botched Hurricane Katrina efforts and the Republican Party had to do this, otherwise they would have come under enormous fire from everyone.

I think it's great that Sarah Palin, a woman, was chosen to be McCain's running mate. But with McCain having only met her once, the pick screamed of desperation. Running on the idea of experience, McCain undercut himself and his brand with the Palin pick, a small town governor from Alaska. McCain himself has said that he was running with experience and that being a governor or mayor was not enough to be President. So what does this say about Mrs. Palin?

I have no problem with the writer of this article, or talking about the McCain/Palin ticket. But in this day and age, with lies being thrown from both sides of the political spectrum, I expect more in-depth honesty from this article, and it just was not there.

- Brian Lomax, Junior

Enough Already

I am sickened by my country's obsession with Governor Sarah Palin, a person no one had heard of; sparing Alaskans, of course; until a few weeks ago. Now it seems every time I turn around, I am hearing about her, and might I add, for all the wrong reasons. I've heard "she's a woman," "she's a mother," "she's a pit-bull," "she was mayor," and "she's a governor." I would argue that these things do not immediately qualify one to be the next VP, let alone President.

I am jarred by anyone who sees Senator McCain's pick as something positive or remarkable, as has been suggested. I am more inclined to say, "transparent" and "insulting." I resent McCain for anointing Gov. Palin as a feminist crusader. I resent hearing about her five children - special needs, Iraq-bound, pregnant or otherwise. I resent the idea that she is a "simple woman" and cannot stand her "small town" appeal. I resent that she will "change the values of American society," as if she knows better than the rest of us. I resent her for using God to justify slaughtering innocent, Iraqis, Afghans, and now Pakistanis. (YouTube does not lie, though politicians do.)

The issues, as I see them, are as follows: Palin wants to overturn Roe v. Wade, wants to continue the "War on Terror," wants to "drill, drill, drill" for Alaskan oil, is anti-gay, anti-gun control, against certain economic controls, and against universal healthcare. And yet when people talk about Gov. Palin it never seems to be for these reasons.

It does not interest me that Gov. Palin is a self-described "hockey mom." What does interest me is that this person is a weak heart-beat away from the presidency, and I cannot stomach the idea of "President Palin."

Ms. Underwood claims: "We value trust, opportunity, safety, pride and a future, a future to succeed together and conquer all difficulties." I might not agree with all of that, but I certainly value trust, and I trust neither Senator McCain nor Gov. Palin. I am for choice, for gun control, for universal healthcare, for human rights, for gays, for energy independence, for diplomacy and for cooperation. I am an idealist. I am a cynic. I am unhappy. As long as I continue to hold to these truths, and McCain and Palin, "the perfect match," to theirs, I fear a future is out of the question.

- Jeffrey Lunnen, Senior

No Knock? No Problem!

I am sure that many students on this campus have had bad experiences with police officers. But I would venture a guess that even those students will find what I am about to tell you shocking.

The mayor of Berwyn Heights, Maryland came home from walking his dogs last week and proceeded to go upstairs to change. While he was upstairs, highly armed SWAT team members broke into his home, shot both of his dogs, and bound him and his mother-in-law on the floor for over two hours. Police searched the premises but found no drugs.

Once the mayor discovered that these intruders were in fact police officers, he demanded to see the search warrant. According to the mayor, he did not receive this warrant until several days later. The mayor's lawyer also claims that this warrant was not a "No-Knock" warrant, meaning that police should have knocked on the mayor's door and issued the warrant to him.

The reason for the search was a package of marijuana that was delivered to the Mayor's home. It turns out that this package was part of a drug smuggling ring, where packages are mailed to an unknown person's home then intercepted. The mayor and his family were just recently cleared of any wrongdoing, but Prince George's county police chief says that the police officers also did nothing wrong.

You may think that incidents such as these are rare, but you would be mistaken. A study entitled, "Overkill: The Rise of Paramilitary Police Raids in America" by Radley Balko, tells the story of how police raids have gotten out of hand in this country. For example, in 1997 a SWAT team raided 64-year-old Ramon Gallardo's home to look for a stolen handgun alleged to be in his son's possession. The officers broke down the man's bedroom door, then shot and killed him after they claimed he reached for a knife. The family maintains that he never owned a knife and a jury later awarded the family $125 million in damages. The stolen gun was never found.

Our government has become so hard on drugs that they seem willing to accept the fact that their policies affect not just hardened drug runners, but casual users and even the completely innocent. The government seems to have decided that we need to be protected from ourselves, but I say that what we really need protection from is our government. If the mayor of a city can have his dogs killed by the police without apology, what happens when they come after you or me? - Ross Crosby, Senior

Slots would benefit Maryland's economy

By Eric J. Buratty
Staff writer

It's unfortunate that the talk about slots in Maryland gets shut down by "better opinion/authority." In 1967, one would have been able to find them in the state, but they have been made illegal since then. Slots are one of many ways to gamble and have been made legal in West Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The unfortunate thing for Marylanders is that they must travel out of state to use them. Delaware is a tax haven, and they seem to be doing just fine with their revenue. Why not do the same thing with Maryland? Slots would offer a win-win situation for both the state and consumers. The recent increase in taxes to six percent should be encouraging more protest than slots.

The common argument against such gambling devices in Maryland is that they could potentially have a negative impact on crime rates or even spawn organized crime. But looking at the existing crime rates in areas such as Washington, D.C., the addition of slots would not be fixing something that is not broken. For that matter, fixing something that actually is "broken" pertains to state revenue.

Recently, state revenue has dropped, and there are no apparent reasons for it to continue in any different manner, especially with the economic downturn. With our tax dollars primarily going to infrastructure, education and law enforcement, state revenue would only have the potential to increase if slots were added. Thus, they would yield positive effects.

Of the benefits slots would offer, they would help alleviate the state deficit. With additional revenue brought in by slots being used to pay for education, we could see increased allocations toward the likes of expanding home and community-based services in Maryland. Also, the savings could help out with expenses toward technological research, transportation, and long-term care. The only question then would be whether the government would choose to use the additional funding in these areas.

Another reason for having slots is that they would serve as a source of entertainment for Marylanders. Sure it may be fun to go to Las Vegas or one of our neighboring states to play slots, but after considering gas prices, it would be better to stay here. If we had slot machines, the state would be sure to generate more revenue. This way, Marylanders do not have to travel out of state just to have some gambling fun, and they at least have a choice to spend their money towards gambling in Maryland without worrying about gas.

Ultimately, the idea is to initiate some thought and implement slots to yield those positive outcomes. By disregarding taxes and gas prices, this alternative source of revenue has benefits that outweigh costs. If slots and casinos are to Vegas as undesired taxes and gas prices are to Maryland, the thought of a few slots here and there (just as we have the lottery) would not hurt. We would not be fixing something that is not broken; we would be helping something in need of attention. Let our voices be heard: out with the taxes and in with the slots!

Slots would potentially bring in a lot more revenue for Maryland as residents currently have to travel to neighboring states to gamble.

Natural disasters make price gouging inevitable

By Zachary Caceres
Staff writer

In the wake of a disaster like Hurricane Ike, politicians and concerned citizens alike call for an end to the practice of "price-gouging." Price gouging is the act of raising prices on essential goods like water or batteries during emergencies. It seems universally agreeable that such an act of profit-bolstering in dire times is thoroughly reprehensible. But is price gouging really the evil exploitation that many claim? Surely concern for your fellow man takes precedence over the weight of your wallet. In fact, doesn't this sudden price surge keep essential goods out of the hands of those who need them most?

It may surprise you that George Mason-based economist Walter Williams and Noble-Prize-winning economists Gary Becker, Vernon Smith and Milton Friedman all offer a resounding "No." Gouging, in fact, is the most efficient way to deal with the economic upheavals accompanying disaster. Scarce goods like bottled water have a value dictated by supply and demand in a marketplace. But when individuals prepare for an impending disaster - by stocking up on bottled water, for instance - the marketplace must adjust to the sudden surge in demand. Anyone who has stocked up on emergency supplies can recall the barren shelves of stores prior to the disaster. In those cases demand has outstripped supply, leaving many desperate people without the supplies they need. The only natural way that businesses can cope with a "run" on an item like bottled water is by raising prices and thus bringing the market closer to equilibrium. Not only do higher prices prevent shortages, but they combat hoarding and encourage an even distribution of the emergency supplies throughout an area. At two dollars a gallon, the first in line will leave with the store's stock of water. At ten dollars a gallon, buying twenty jugs seems suddenly less attractive.

Despite preparation, sometimes the fallout of a disaster demands the efforts of massive manpower and investment. What else offers builders, electricians and nurses incentive enough to bring their much-needed skills to the affected area? As Walter Williams states, "Higher prices, along with windfall profits, are economic signals of unmet human wants. As such, they encourage producers to meet those human wants." So instead of criticizing high prices next emergency, let's recognize that price-gouging is the natural economic effect of a disaster and our best means of preparation and recovery.

Price gouging after disasters brings "the market closer to equilibrium."

Residents who had the option and the means to evacuate placed hardworking volunteers in dangerous conditions.

'Selfish' citizens are rescued by heroes after Ike's devastation

By Bethany Jeffries
Staff writer

News coverage abounded in the days before Hurricane Ike made landfall at Galveston, Texas. Warning upon warning was given for residents in danger to evacuate to safer regions, away from the 115 mph winds and the expected 25 foot wall of water that was predicted to envelop the town. Many took these warnings to heart, packed what they could and left for safety, some getting onto buses without even knowing their destination, or when they would return. Police and officials made every effort to help residents evacuate, yet tens of thousands of stubborn home-owners and citizens refused to move, deciding to wait out the storm, ignoring the phrase "certain death" with ease.

After the storm, about two thousand have been rescued by the largest rescue mission Texas has ever organized - over 1,500 people looking for survivors of Ike. Some estimates claim that 140,000 of the million ordered to evacuate remained behind. These foolish, selfish people have placed hard-working volunteers and civilians in an uninhabitable Galveston in the days after Ike. Through self-centered reasoning and downright stupid decision making, these people ignored warnings and claims of "certain death" to stay behind. They forced others to come to their aid. Aid that wouldn't have been needed if these people had used common sense and fled like thousands of their neighbors. This type of disaster is completely unlike any other, where people who were rescued stayed out of necessity - these people are there through their own choice, and they should have abided evacuating. Instead, hardworking police officers, firefighters and volunteer rescuers were placed in dangerous situations to save foolishly residents from their drowning homes. Instead of beginning a rebuilding effort to allow people back to their homes and focusing on the $8 million in damage, officials had to focus rescue missions for the thousands who chose of their own volition to remain in Galveston, facing the direct approach of a hurricane the approximate size of the state of Texas. The search and rescue teams throughout that city should be recognized as heroes, saving citizens who willingly decided to be victims by choosing to tide out the biggest storm Texas has seen in decades.

Deficit rises as U.S. economy nears Great Depression levels

By Derek Pettinelli
Staff writer

It's no secret that the economy is in pretty bad shape right now and things seem to be getting worse everyday. Gas prices are still high and are being manipulated right in front of our noses, making $3.29 per gallon seem like a bargain. Both the job and housing markets are collapsing, with many people losing their homes and property. While we're definitely in a recession, some people are even throwing out the word "depression," saying that this is the greatest financial crisis since the Great Depression. In fact, the U.S. debt may even surpass $11.3 trillion as a result of the bailout of the two mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which cost the government $300 to $500 billion. For the fiscal year of 2009, federal spending has already resulted in a debt of $10.6 trillion, which is an obscene amount of money.

After the federal takeovers of Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, it wasn't over yet. The Lehman Brothers investing firm went under and Bank of America purchased Merrill Lynch. Insurance firm AIG was also set to go under until they were saved by a federal loan of $85 billion. As if all the recent financial mess wasn't enough, other countries are now basically jumping in to try and bail us out. Canada just recently joined the Federal Reserve and other central banks by adding an additional $1.89 billion to the banking system in order to keep the credit markets up and running. In addition, the Bank of Canada also bought about $2 billion in securities in one day, making it their largest purchase in more than eight years. President Bush has a plan to bail out the Wall Street firms and that plan is to spend $700 billion to try to help negate the $1 trillion in debt from bad loans.

The economy is no doubt one of the biggest talking points of the upcoming election and it's a shame that irrelevant matters are all that seems to be in the focus of the media. It doesn't matter that Obama's middle name is Hussein or that Sarah Palin has a pregnant 17-year-old daughter. Being an election year makes things all the more complex and what's even more puzzling is that neither candidate really seems to have a solid plan to fix it. McCain is being tied to Bush and that may be enough to cost him the election, since the economy was so good during the Clinton years with a record $526 billion surplus versus Bush's record $648 billion deficit.

Why go Greek? Here's why.

By Andrew Kirkendall
Staff Writer

The question was posed, "why go Greek?" Such a simple question leads to a very complex answer. The short answer is that it looks good on a resume. To expand on that thought, it shows potential employers that you are dedicated, because membership in a Greek organization, any Greek organization, requires the dedication of an extensive amount of time. Also, by being a member of a Greek organization, it is showing a commitment to community service, because even if it is a social Fraternity or Sorority, it still requires its members to help with various fundraisers and activities that help to benefit the local community.

At the very least, it is another extracurricular activity, but it is more meaningful than membership in another club, because it means far more to employers and even more to the members themselves.

"Being Greek is more than wearing letters. Being Greek is being part of a brotherhood that will last a lifetime no matter where you go or who you're with. You can have everything taken away from you, but they can never take away your connection with your Greek Brothers," said Rafe Park, former president of Alpha Phi Omega and member of Kappa Sigma.

Being involved in a Greek organization means so much more. It means that you come from a long line of excellence, and strive for nothing else. It means that you have a built-in support network - no matter what problems may arise, there are always people behind you ready to help at a moment's notice. After all, there is a reason why other members are referred to as brothers and sisters. "It's a great place to meet people of all sorts of backgrounds that come together to form one brotherhood; a bond that can't be broken by any outsider. Greek life is the best End of story!" said Kanye Ntumbi, a member of Sigma Pi.

It is this aspect of Greek life which employers find most desirable. It is this dedication to the common good, this willingness to sacrifice the good of one's self for the betterment of the group, that employers find appealing.

In addition, going Greek can also open many doors far more easily than it would be for another non-Greek applicant, because of extensive alumni networks that span throughout the nation and in some cases the world. It is not guaranteed that going Greek will definitely aid one in furthering his or her career; however, it definitely gives one a competitive edge over the opposition for employment.

Face it, at the end of one's collegiate career, the training wheels are removed, and the real world begins. Why not go into the real world with an edge over the competition, and with a support network of brothers/sisters who are willing to help in any way possible?

SU celebrates Hispanic Heritage Month

By Amanda Durski
Staff Writer

The intricate music and rhythms of Chilean folksinger and songwriter Isabel Umanzor filled Salisbury University's Bistro last Wednesday. The music resounded while students, faculty and community members enjoyed foods such as avocado hummus, Mexican turkey balls and Puerto Rican beans. All these festivities were provided by the University to commemorate Hispanic Heritage Month.

Hispanic Heritage Month is a time of remembrance and celebration that began on September 15. It is a cultural experience that celebrates the customs and traditions of the United States residents whose heritage can be traced to Spain and Mexico as well as the Spanish-speaking areas of Central America, South America and the Caribbean.

The month is also an anniversary of the struggle and success of establishing independence in some Latin American countries. Hispanic families across the U.S. celebrate their cultural identity and are provided the chance to surround themselves with loved ones, food and music. Salisbury University presented Umanzor to bring a Hispanic atmosphere to the campus.

Umanzor is a native of Santiago, Chile, but her love of sharing music with others brought her to the United States in 2001. Her experience includes 15 years on the guitar and playing with multiple groups as a session musician. She debuted an album in 2005 labeled Dime. Cuban ballads and Latin-American influences can be found in her music. In addition to being a musician, Umanzor is an artist. Her paintings inspire powerful feelings and emotions, just as her rhythms do. She even painted the art for the front cover of her album.

"Earthy, social, and intimate" is how Umanzor describes her music. Such unrestricted music was played at the Bistro on Wednesday. It was hard to talk over the passionate chords, beats and voices. Even though it was not in English, the overall feeling of the music was apparent. After each of Umanzor's songs, loud applause echoed throughout the room. Salisbury University students Rocio Trelles and Michelle Esparza commented on their enjoyment.

"The music reminded me of the legit Spanish culture," Trelles said. Esparza agreed. "It was good for people to hear this different type of music, to be exposed to it," she said.

With rap, hip hop and pop music dominating the radio, it is both educational and enjoyable to hear music of Hispanic origin. Through it, one is able to experience a part of a culture and tradition that is life for many people around the world. Music is central in these lives and reflects their heritage.

"Family and culture are important for people. We live, feel and grow in both music and dance, and my music shows this. I have been playing music from my country of Chile for a long time, and now I get to play my music," Umanzor said.

Umanzor also addresses social issues in her music. "It is crucial to have respect for everything around us. Recycle and be wise," she said.

In events such as the Bistro's dinner and Umanzor's music at Salisbury University, the traditions and customs of a culture are exposed to the public. It is both educational and fun to experience different music, foods and events.

Hispanic Heritage Months lasts until October 15, but the Hispanic culture will live on for ages.

Alpha Phi Omega: Not Your Average Fraternity

By Robert Cogdell III
Staff Writer

Many students are aware of the plethora of fraternities and sororities on campus, but one that sets to establish itself beyond average Greek life norms is the coed fraternity Alpha Phi Omega (APO).

Originally all male, this fraternity went coed towards its early years of formation in order to make all things equal. This fraternity allows both males and females to be members. Although each member is referred to as a "brother," it has no bias towards either gender and equally encourages each gender to pledge. Started in the United States and branching from Boy Scout principles driven towards college life, APO chapters extend to Canada and even the Philippines. The SU chapter is known as Alpha Phi Delta.

The two original founders of the Salisbury APO chapter were transfer students, but they lost the chapter due to inactivity in the 1970s. Current President Heather Wampole and two others felt it necessary to revive the organization; Wampole in particular because of her love for community service. "You get to do more things freely, like you're actually doing something. It's a great high," Wampole said.

In order to attend meetings, known as chapter, one must complete the pledge process, and new members are usually inducted towards the end of each semester. Wampole went on to say that many people simply "wear their Greek letters, but in Alpha Phi Omega, you earn those letters."

Although APO is not officially recognized by SU, and therefore unable to participate in such Greek life events as Greek Week, Wampole does not see this as a handicap. "When people see our community involvement, like at the soup kitchen, they're not going to see that we're not Greek life. They'll see APO and say 'you're Greek life,'" she said. Wampole noted that this is one of the greatest rewards of being involved.

Contrary to popular belief, students can be members of Alpha Phi Omega and any other fraternity or sorority, much like APO Sergeant at Arms Andrew Woods. Woods is the founder and current president of Kappa Sigma, an all male fraternity, thus demonstrating the duality of being an active member in both a social and service fraternity.

Being a service-based fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega is heavily involved in community service. "We try to do a minimum of two service projects per month," Wampole said. Relay for Life and volunteering at soup kitchens are just a few of the many service projects on their service's resume. APO has also participated in park clean ups, volunteers at life crisis centers and sends letters and care packages to soldiers in a troop they host stationed in Afghanistan.

When compared to a social fraternity, "It's like apples and oranges," Woods said. Wampole made it obvious that at APO, they "value fellowship, but service comes first." Woods stated that many sororities and fraternities can "benefit from more balance between social and service orientation."

According to Woods, APO offers an "opportunity for people to experience charity and it is good to play a part in the community." For more inquiries about pledging Alpha Phi Omega, contact apouschapter@yahoo.com.

Kate Voegele and Virginia Coalition to headline SOAP's fall concert

By Laura Bounds
Staff Writer

Music heads to Salisbury University Sunday, October 5 with an electrifying concert featuring Kate Voegele and Virginia Coalition. The concert, put on by the SOAP Club, was the idea of last year's SOAP advisor, Jessica Mullins.

"Mullins saw Voegele perform last year at the Arundel Mills Mall and loved the performance so much that she immediately approached Voegele and her management and asked if she would like to perform at SU," said Jessica Hicks, President of SOAP. "Kate agreed and after that we started working hard to book and promote the show."

Voegele, also known as "Mia" from the popular WB series "One Tree Hill," is an insightful 20-year-old singer/songwriter from Bay Village, Ohio, whose deep powerful voice earned her first album, "Don't Look Away," national attention on television and Myspace.

Her big break came at 16, when demos she recorded with her father led the way to an opening slot at one of the John Mayer and Counting Crows' 2003 concerts. As Virginia Coalition has an original sound that is refreshing in today's familiar pop-culture music society. With their upbeat melodies and catchy beats, the group gives their fans a different sound that ranges from rock to pop to soul. Their latest album, "Home This Year," is written with stirring lyrics and sung with equally emotional intensity.

The band, who has known each other for 15 years, is constantly evolving and searching for new sounds. "We don't want to keep writing the same song over and over," Poliakoff said on the band's Website, www.virginiacoalition.com. "I'm proud to be part of a group of three friends who have gone from the basement and garage to maturity and making music that speaks from the heart. It's a struggle to make a great album, but we welcomed the opportunity to reinvent ourselves while staying true to the core of what we do."

Both artists will appear in Holloway Hall on Sunday, Oct. 5 at 8 p.m. Tickets are on sale now for $5 in the Student Activities Office, GUC 125. Tickets are limited to one per person with valid SU gull card.

The bands' members include Andy Poliakoff on lead vocals and guitar;

Unordinarily S(h)ane The Digital Mask

By Shane Hill
Staff Writer

Technology: friend or foe? Oftentimes we're so consumed in technology that we forget we're even using it. Last week in the TETC building - one of the last places you'd expect to have anything technologically obsolete - I ran into a problem. As I stood there pressing the screen trying to get my papers to print, I was afraid it was frozen or that I broke it some how. Little did I know it was mouse-operated.

Even scarier are those who hide behind a digital mask. So I question, when it comes to the affairs of the heart and intimate social interaction, has the computer gone too far?

When wearing a mask, your emotion never comes through. So if the mask frowns you're sad, if it smiles you're happy. Pretty restricted when compared to the vast range of emotions humans are capable of expressing. In the same sense, there's a trend of digital masks going around these days. The other day I talked to an old acquaintance whose boyfriend broke up with her via text message and I thought, "How convenient." You don't even have to put emotions into a text, which is why it makes them so easy to send, yet so hard to read and interpret.

She's not the only one I've seen broken up with via text and, almost worst, a Myspace message. The digital mask is particularly scary because it seems to say that our emotions can be digitalized.

Now we can effortlessly poke, stalk and be creepers on internet communities. In fact, if I had a dime for every time a friend of mine, or even I, went through every Facebook picture of someone I liked, I'd be a millionaire in a day guaranteed. But isn't showing yourself and putting in the emotion worth the effort, with the payback twice as rewarding?

I met a guy who couldn't text for two weeks because even unlimited text was limited to his love for texting, and that love came at about 1,783 texts a day. As if that wasn't excessive I actually knew someone who used a digital mask to pursue a lover. They lost the lover and ended with an addiction. And that addiction was compulsive lying.

In more age old tales from "Star Trek" and movies like "Bicentennial Man" and "A.I.," robots, a compilation of computer hardware and software, longed to be human. But looking at today's world, it is scary seeing people turn into robots, trying to convert all their emotions and feelings into 0's and 1's. Interesting, because in math we learn that one plus zero equals one, and knowing that it takes two to tango, I think it's safe to say when given a choice, most people would rather connect with another human face-to-face versus by satellite or internet.

Even so, I wonder if we really lost the war between human and machine before it started, or have we just traded our creativity and originality for digital junk? What happened to the days of Shakespeare and unaided romances, and who truly knows how to read a text message? So I say when it comes to love, bravery, courtesy, and respect, put down the phones, get unplugged, take off the mask and speak what you feel, because feeling is one thing not even the most expensive processor can process.

From the Suggestion Box...

This column is based on the comments and concerns of students, faculty, and staff via the suggestion boxes online at www.salisbury.edu/suggestionbox. The President's Office seeks responses to the issues raised from appropriate campus personnel. Not everything can be fixed, but a reasoned explanation can be offered. Keep those suggestions coming!

From the Suggestion Box

1. "Please take a look at every other Maryland University and see how they have 'Special Back to School Hours' at their Bookstores. Both Towson and University of Maryland have Saturday hours because they understand that students need their books!"

2. "I have been to three colleges in my lifetime and SU is the first to ever have its school Bookstore closed the first weekend back. It is ridiculous that there are no Saturday hours. I even checked Wor-Wic Community College's Bookstore and they have Saturday hours. How am I supposed to buy my schoolbooks when the Bookstore is closed? I work and go to school and the only time I have is Saturday and now I don't have my books for Monday. Is there a reasonable explanation for not having the Bookstore open at all? It is very, very frustrating that the entire campus shuts down on the weekend and you can't talk to a real person, only the automated service. THERE NEEDS TO BE SATURDAY HOURS AT THE SCHOOLS BOOKSTORE! You sure there are SU students who also work, that would agree."

Lisa Gray, Director of the University Bookstore, responded:

"The Bookstore's extended hours actually began on August 28th, when freshman arrived to campus. We were open the first Saturday before class and Labor Day to allow working students and commuters the opportunity to shop, and we offered extended weekday evening hours. Students also have the option to order books via our Web site and have them shipped and we ran a special shipping rate of $6.95 no matter how small or large the order."

Alcohol education pilot program will continue until full implementation

By Ashlee Laughlin
Staff Writer

Alcohol Wise is an online alcohol education and prevention program designed by a company called Third Millennium Classroom. SU is in the process of evaluating this alcohol education program to later enhance the awareness of the students. The program consists of pretests and posttests used to challenge the knowledge of the student body when it comes to alcohol. If implemented into the new student orientation courses, this program will add to the enhancement of subjects such as health and wellness.

Salisbury is using the internet to their advantage by including it in the methods used to educate students about the dangers of alcohol. The program will also aid in the control of alcohol-related violations.

Alcohol Wise lessons include subjects such as blood-alcohol concentration, intoxication, perceptions of drinking and the effects it has on academia as well as social behaviors, to name a few.

"Alcohol Wise is an interactive computer-based educational workshop, along with a post-test and a follow-up check later in the semester," said John Stout, Coordinator of Student Life.

This fall will be the third semester of Salisbury University's "pilot study" of Alcohol Wise. "The study was commissioned and funded by the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs and Student Health Services," Stout said. According to Stout, the Alcohol Wise program will cost each participant $7 for a two-hour long session.

"Approximately 250 first-year residential and commuter students will complete the course this semester," Stout said.

In the near future, Alcohol Wise may be an orientation requirement for the entire freshman population as well as well as transfer students with less than 24 credit hours. The concept of using the internet as a source of alcohol education is to relate to a technology savvy generation. "First-year students are particularly a high-risk population, and institutions of higher education have a responsibility to educate and promote responsible decision-making," Stout said.

Already, SU has seen a tremendous amount of growth and significant knowledge gains in those who have participated in the study, which has been demonstrated by test scores. Along with collecting the progress data of Alcohol Wise, Salisbury will be keeping record of all alcohol-related incidents that are affecting the students at the University.

The goal is to provide an effective as well as relevant way to convey knowledge of alcohol and the consequences of unsafe behavior. Salisbury University is focused on the quality of scholarship that students are receiving here. "We hope to see a positive impact on students' choices and behaviors, such as lower frequencies of binge drinking and drunk driving, and less alcohol-related code of conduct violations," Stout said.

Football prevails against CNU, 38-21

By Chris Brown
Staff Writer

The No. 8 Salisbury University football team improved to 3-0 on the season as the Gulls defeated Christopher Newport University, 38-21. The Captains scored first as Salisbury was marred by early mistakes, but senior quarterback Shelby Fisher's touchdown run in the second quarter and a 32-yard field goal by freshman kicker Tommy Kowalik gave the Gulls a 10-7 lead at the half. "The field goal gave us momentum going into halftime and then after Coach Wood's speech, I said it was time to step it up," Fisher said.

Salisbury began the second half with a 10 play 72 yard scoring drive and by the fourth quarter the Gulls had raced out to a 31-7 lead. "The word is opportunity," head coach Sherman Wood said. "We had opportunities early on, but we did not take advantage." Salisbury blocked a Christopher Newport field goal attempt in the first quarter, but fumbled the ball on the next possession. A 33 yard punt return by sophomore Zach Holbrook put Salisbury on the Captains' 26 yard line in position to score, but a Fisher fumble on the third down gave the ball back to Christopher Newport.

Fisher carried the ball 16 times for 109 yards and two touchdowns, while senior quarterback Ronnie Curley ran for 75 yards and a score. Junior slot William Ronnie Curley drops back to throw a pass against Christopher Newport on Saturday. Salisbury won 38-21. Curley ran for 75 yards and a touchdown.

Midgette added 70 rushing yards and a touchdown, as the Gulls accumulated 337 yards on the ground including 255 in the second half. "We were trying to make big plays, but they were getting to the ball faster in the first half. We were able to be much more physical in the second half," Fisher said.

"We were able to stretch the game and widen the margin in the second half," Wood said. Christopher Newport quarterback Matt Long threw two interceptions and was sacked three times by the Salisbury defense. Junior linebacker Josh Leonardis had 11 tackles, while seniors Matt Barnes and Jarrell Chandler each contributed 10 tackles, respectively. Senior defensive lineman

Paul Cynewski totaled eight tackles including five for a combined loss of 26 yards and had two sacks. "We weren't aggressive enough to dictate the game defensively like we wanted to," Wood said. "That wasn't our team out there in the first half. We weren't reading our keys defensively, and that is not the character of our team."

Defensive back Justin Acker's interception in the second quarter set up Salisbury's first touchdown. In the fourth, senior Matthew Bookard took a Christopher Newport pass the other way for a 51-yard touchdown return.

Salisbury was without starting kicker Andrew Geisert, who tweaked his hip this week during practice. Freshmen Paul Bergstrom and Kowalik filled in for the injured junior. Bergstrom handled the kickoff duties averaging 58 yards a kick in six chances and Kowalik's 32-yard field goal at the end of the second quarter gave the Gulls their first lead of the game.

"Christopher Newport played a very good game. They had a great game plan for us," Wood said. Salisbury is 5-2 in their history against the Captains. Both of CNU's victories have been at Sea Gull Stadium, in 2004 and 2006. Last year, Salisbury won 35-21 on the strength of three rushing touchdowns in the final seven minutes of the game. This was CNU's first game of the season after last week's home opener against Wesley College was canceled because of Tropical Storm Hanna.

Next week, Salisbury will head north for a game against Delaware Valley College. The Aggies are 1-1, and won their last contest against conference rival Wesley 25-22.

You may not notice him, but every week he's out there. You will not see him running the option or coming up with a key sack, but senior offensive lineman Jeremy McKinney is a huge part of Salisbury's offense. The 6'4" 287 lbs. Gaithersburg native was named All-CAC First Team last season, which was his first as a starter. J-Mac, as those close to him more commonly know him, is currently majoring in Conflict Analysis and Dispute Resolution.

What are your future plans? Well I have at least one more semester after this year here at SU. But after that, I plan on going back home to Montgomery County joining the police department and maybe joining SWAT or SAT.

What is your favorite kind of music? I enjoy all types of music from The Carter 3 to Hank Williams Jr. What is something people don't know about you? I enjoy moonlit walks on the beach and the smell of fresh roses and I always love a good box of chocolates.

What is your favorite NFL team? Hail to the Redskins, but I'll root for anyone who's playing Dallas. Outside of football what do you like to do? (Laughing) There isn't much time outside of football right now. But I would have to say I spend my time relaxing. I play a lot of NCAA 09 and Call of Duty 4. But, I'll work over any of my teammates in Madden or NBA LIVE.

Who are you going to vote for? I actually have to talk to my mom about getting an absentee ballot. Right now I'm still undecided. Both are good men with good ideas about how to make our country better, but neither has really sold me yet.

How does being named All-CAC last season motivate you this year? It motivates me to be even more. As a team we didn't accomplish our goals, so obviously I need to play even harder and be even better.

What does it mean to you to have five seniors starting on the Offensive Line? It's really nice. Really though, we have seniors all over the field and it goes a very long way towards helping us achieve our goals. But to have a group of five guys who came in together and have worked hard over the last four years and who know and execute their assignments it helps the quarterbacks because they know they can trust us.

What was it like playing in Salisbury's first night game? Having the home opener at night was awesome. To be a part of campus history and to come out and play a quality opponent and to put on a show like that in front of that size crowd - it was some kind of experience. It will surely be one I will never forget.

defensive backs Benjamin Reed and Kevin Mongello. The Sea Gulls continued their undefeated standing through Saturday afternoon, as they were once again the hosts of the affair, this time to the Lynchburg College Hornets in a grueling, hard-fought bout. In a match-up where the Hornets steadily maintained possession of the ball throughout, it was the Sea Gulls who would draw first blood with a downfield score by junior defensive back Benjamin Reed, with just 55 seconds remaining before the end of the first half. From then on, there would be a fierce, defensive struggle between the two teams. No goal was scored until 1:20 p.m. before the end of the second half, when Hornet sophomore forward Mike Napolitano, who scored two goals in the contest, the Sea Gulls combined for a total of 50 shots attempted, including an astounding 27 of those attempted shots on goal. Also scoring two goals for the Sea Gulls was sophomore midfielder Ben DeLisle, who contributed an assist in the contest as well. Cross Country has high hopes for upcoming season

By Tom Watson
Staff Writer

It looks to be another championship season for the 2008 Salisbury University Cross Country team. The men's team is hunting for their fourth straight CAC championship heading into this season. Head Coach Jim Jones, who refers to them as his "dream team," said that "after 10 years, we are finally at a point where the runners want to work, they want to get better and they are all working towards one goal."

The men will be anchored by senior leaders Zach Dickerson and Ben Thomas who "are extraordinary leaders; they're leading workouts, making sure everyone is on the same page, and getting the team for meets," Jones said. Last season, SU placed seven runners on all-CAC teams. Jones also recorded his third consecutive CAC coach of the year award.

Next to Dickerson and Thomas, Jones is relying on junior transfer Travis Boochee, sophomore and 2007 CAC rookie of the year Chris Barnard, senior Carl Biele, freshman Trevor Keen and sophomore Sam Boimov. "Chris is running extremely well and Sam has done lots of good work toward this season," Jones said.

If the men are the dream team then the women are certainly the "redeem team," as they are setting out to bring the CAC back to Salisbury after their second place finish in 2007. Though all-CAC first team runner Kelly Sullivan, who will miss the season due to injury, hampers the women Sea Gulls they are still confident they can contend for a championship. "They are a hard working group of girls, who put the team first," Jones said. The women's strength relies not on the ability of one or two runners to place highly, but in their ability to run in "packs," as Jones believes there are four or five women who can finish in the top eight each race. Jones expects seniors Jenn Bulger and Amy DeMichele to do "big things" this season as the team leaders. Sophomores Kristin Stromberg (all-CAC first team), Masha Berge and Megan Blue and freshmen Emily Powell and Becca Stinner will look to contribute as well.

As for the NCAA tournament, Jones feels that the men's team has the best opportunity to qualify as a team. "Our first goal is to win the CAC, to put ourselves in position," Jones said.

In their first meet this year the men and women's teams both finished in first. At the Waynesburg Invitational, the men finished third while the women claimed the seventh spot. Their next meet is on Sept. 27. There are 20 teams competing, making it the largest race that he's hosted in his 10 years at SU. Salisbury cross country has never won both home meets in one season.

Self-proclaimed new "SU" can't hang with the real SU

By Jeffrey Southworth
Sports Editor

Salisbury's dominance on every athletic field and court has led to countless amounts of trophies, awards and All-Americans. The standard set by our beloved Sea Gull athletes and coaches has provided a simple formula for those college and university athletic programs that cannot seem to keep up. The formula seems to be: if you can't beat them, join them. That is what Stevenson University, formerly Villa Julie, might have had in mind when deciding to become "The New SU."

Stevenson University t-shirts and an article in their weekly school paper suggest "there is a new SU in town." Stevenson might want to consider a little more than a name change to try and compete with our Sea Gulls; maybe new uniforms to complete their make-over, I heard maroon and gold make nice uniforms.

The t-shirts circling around the Stevenson campus shows a Mustang kicking and knocking down Sammy the Sea Gull. A pretty bold piece of artwork suggesting that the Mustangs think they're ready to dethrone our Sea Gulls from atop the athletic mountain.

To make the statement that there is a new SU in town is a little bold, considering Villa Julie athletics weren't in the same country as Salisbury last season, nonetheless our town. Stevenson's inability to field a football team is the first thing that left me scratching my head after reading about their apparent presence in athletics.

I wonder if this town Stevenson claims to have entered has a baseball diamond, because it did not for Villa Julie. Last year, SU baseball went 3-0 with a total score of 38-3. The size of the diamond did not matter either; SU softball went 2-0 against the Villa Julie with a total score of 16-2.

I hope Stevenson packed some court shoes and basketballs in their town shift because our Gulls did not play nice last year against the Mustangs in volleyball or basketball. SU volleyball beat Villa Julie 3-1, while SU men and women's basketball combined to go 3-1 against the Mustangs.

Maybe I have been a little harsh and not very supportive of Villa Julie's decision to become "The New SU." Let's look at the positives, in women's lacrosse last year Villa Julie scored nine goals, but our Gulls scored 44, so not much a positive. But in all seriousness Villa Julie's most positive resemblance to our Sea Gulls was their men's lacrosse team. Although they still did not beat our Gulls, they put up their best effort. We beat them 13-12 in our first meeting, which came in the CAC championship game.

I am all for positive and competitive attitudes, trash talking and even stealing team mascots (if in the spirit of fun school rivalry) but for Stevenson to claim there is a "new SU in town" is not how I would have started my first athletic season under a new name. So this goes out to all Sea Gull athletes, coaches and fans: let's show Stevenson what it takes to be recognized as SU, because even though there may be a "new SU" in town, the old sheriff remains on duty. Go Gulls.

Gulls show dominance on and off the volleyball court

By Edward Baidoo
Staff Writer

The Sea Gulls volleyball team has looked very impressive thus far in 2008. The Gulls added four more wins this weekend at the Sea Gull Classic by defeating Richard Stockton College twice on Saturday, 3-0. These victories came after beating Virginia Wesleyan, 3-1, and Swarthmore College, 3-0, on Friday night. This victory brings Coach Knight's squad to fifteen consecutive wins after their opening night loss to Juniata College.

They have been winning these games in a very impressive fashion by defeating many of their opponents rather handily. One of the key factors in the success of the Gulls is, as Knight said, "Playing an up-tempo style."

This style causes a lot of problems for many opposing teams. Many teams, like the opponents they played this weekend, try to counter the SU attack by slowing down the tempo, but as Knight said, "If we play our style of game, we will be hard to beat."

This tournament also meant a lot to the team because the Gulls have had a total of one home game so far this season before this weekend's Sea Gull Classic. The fact that they were coming home to play teams in their region also made this weekend that much more important to the team.

"We want to play well against everyone, but we especially want to perform well against all region opponents. We also want to play well at home in front of our great fans that come out to support us," Knight said when talking about the importance of the tournament to her team.

The Gulls are looking good thus far and seem to be ready to try to do two things that have never been done before in consecutive years in SU volleyball history: repeat as Capital Athletic Conference champions and make it back to the NCAA tournament. In order to do this, they will have to come out on top over other schools that are also likely to be in the hunt like St. Mary's, Stevenson and Wesley.

"In order to repeat as conference champs, it will take some luck, as well as the team continuing to work hard at practice and all sixteen members contributing to that goal. We also have to play our best against the best," Knight said about their chances.

Their next game will be on Wednesday against conference rival Wesley College. The volleyball team would also love for the SU student body to come out and wear pink on Tuesday, Oct. 7 at 7 p.m. for their game against Stevenson University to support breast cancer awareness and research on Dig Pink Night. The first 300 students to come, starting at 6:45 p.m., will receive free tee shirts and two lucky contestants in attendance will win a 2009 Ford Flex.

The Sea Gulls began this week's undefeated reign last Tuesday afternoon, as they hosted the winless Gallaudet University Bison at the SU Soccer Complex. The Bison (0-7, CAC 0-2) proved to be no match for the host team as they were held to no shots in their embarrassing 8-0 rut. Led by sophomore forward Mike Napolitano, who scored two goals in the contest, the Sea Gulls combined for a total of 50 shots attempted, including an astounding 27 of those attempted shots on goal. Also scoring two goals for the Sea Gulls was sophomore midfielder Ben DeLisle, who contributed an assist in the contest as well. The other goals of the game were scored by freshman forward Sam Forline, junior midfielder Alex Hargrove and junior defensive backs Benjamin Reed and Kevin Mongello.

Men's soccer still undefeated

The No. 17 SU men's soccer team (8-0, CAC 1-0) ended the week at the top of the Capital Athletic Conference after a landslide victory against conference rival Gallaudet University and an exciting, double-overtime 2-1 thriller against non-conference Lynchburg College.

The Sea Gulls continued their undefeated standing through Saturday afternoon, as they were once again the hosts of the affair, this time to the Lynchburg College Hornets in a grueling, hard-fought bout. In a match-up where the Hornets steadily maintained possession of the ball throughout, it was the Sea Gulls who would draw first blood with a downfield score by junior defensive back Benjamin Reed, with just 55 seconds remaining before the end of the first half. From then on, there would be a fierce, defensive struggle between the two teams. No goal was scored until 1:20 p.m. before the end of the second half, when Hornet sophomore forward Mike Napolitano, who scored two goals in the contest, the Sea Gulls combined for a total of 50 shots attempted, including an astounding 27 of those attempted shots on goal. Also scoring two goals for the Sea Gulls was sophomore midfielder Ben DeLisle, who contributed an assist in the contest as well. The other goals of the game were scored by freshman forward Sam Forline, junior midfielder Alex Hargrove and junior their opponents 2-1 this season. Even with the Sea Gulls gaining more possession of the ball heading into the first overtime, the battle between the two teams remained a stalemate. At the start of the second overtime, the Sea Gulls seemed to have gained new life, and they started the second overtime with a new energy. This spark of life would show as the Sea Gull forwards came out pressuring the Hornet defensive backs. The pressure would eventually result in a heads-up assist from Napolitano to senior midfielder Romaine Bruney that led to a one-on-one against Hornets goalie Drew Nichols and a game-winning goal.

The Sea Gulls out shot the Hornets 12-10 in the contest. SU recorded three of their 12 shots in overtime. The contest included 31 fouls and four yellow cards. SU received 19 of those fouls and two of the yellow cards.

The Sea Gulls will once again head into another week undefeated and at the top of their conference as they visit the Goucher College Gophers this Tuesday afternoon in Towson, MD. The Sea Gulls defeated Goucher 6-0 last season in a home win.

Gulls look to put more in net

By Shawn Nisson
Staff Writer

The Salisbury University women's soccer (3-2-3, CAC 1-0-1) team kicked off their conference schedule this week as the Gulls took on Wesley on Wednesday and then had a showdown with Stevenson on Saturday.

On Wednesday, defensive pressure paid off for the Gulls, as they turned a Wesley mistake into early offense. Four minutes into the contest senior Wesley defender Becky Kreps attempted to clear the ball from within her own box. However, SU team captain Christina Eury stepped into the ball's path deflecting it off of her chest and into the net, collecting her first goal of the season.

Salisbury continued to control the run of play as any advance up the field by the Wolverines was quickly shut down by the SU mid-field. The Sea Gulls pressure on the ball stifled Wesley as they could only muster two shots, neither of which were on goal.

Numerous times the Gulls advanced into Wesley territory only to lack the creative spark needed to score a goal. Salisbury's best opportunity to double their lead came in the 78th minute as junior defender Hillary Grove fired a shot to the top left hand corner of the net from 22 yards out forcing Kim Fearnbach to stretch out and make a nice save. While Salisbury registered 17 shots, nine of which were on goal, the Gulls could not manage to put another tally on the board.

"Just like the last time we had good opportunities, a lot of opportunities just you know were not getting the ball in the net after the fact," said head coach Jim Nestor. "So we've got to keep working on quality opportunities, quality finishes. We need to get more people in the box and get a little bit more balance in the box."

On Saturday, the Gulls faced off with an old foe with a new name as Stevenson University, formerly Villa Julie College, traveled to Salisbury for a CAC showdown. The two teams battled back and forth, however in 110 minutes of play neither team could scratch the scoreboard as the game ended in a scoreless double overtime tie.

Salisbury out shot Stevenson 11-9, and registered five shots on goal to the Mustangs three. Each team also recorded one shot in each of the overtime periods, but neither SU's Gena Goodson, who recorded her third shutout of the season, or her counterpart Brittany Ross would surrender a score.

"It's what we said all week in practice," Nestor said, "do whatever it takes to get that finish, if it's being a little bit more selfish or maybe getting a little more creative in that final third and inside the box to get a little better window for better opportunities, we need to be able to finish."
